Driver taken to hospital after car crashes into building

A car heading east on Welton Street between 15th Street and the 16th Street Mall on Friday crashed into the side of the Fontius Building downtown, caving in part of a wall under a window.

The Denver Fire Department's collapse team reinforced the building, which had minor damage, Assistant Fire Chief Steve Garrod said.

A Denver police officer at the scene did not release the identity of the driver, who was taken to a hospital. The woman, 40 to 45 years old, was driving a silver Ford Taurus sedan. Officers said they believed she may have had a seizure. The Fontius Building is unoccupied.
